

Renowned French Political Scientist
Special Advisor for Geopolitics, Institut Montaigne in Paris
Founder of the French Institute for International Relations (IFRI)

Dominique Moïsi is one of Europe's leading geo-strategic thinkers. A renowned political scientist, author, and co-founder of the prestigious French Institute for International Affairs (IFRI) for which he worked as Deputy Director before being appointed Special Advisor.

Dominique Moïsi is a Visiting Research Professor at King's College London and Special Advisor to Institut Montaigne. Dominique has lectured at Sciences Po, Harvard and at the College of Europe in Natolin.

During the 1990s Moïsi was renowned for writing several "trilateral" (British-German-French) papers with Timothy Garton Ash and Michael Mertes, in favour of a combined eastward enlargement and institutional modernisation of the EU.

An internationally respected specialist in the fields of geopolitics and international relations, he is frequently called upon to comment on the future of Europe, geo-political trends, and the geo-politics of emotions.

Moïsi writes for the Financial Times, New York Times, Die Welt, Der Standard, Foreign Affairs, and many other major newspapers. He is the author of many books including the renowned, 'The Geopolitics of Emotion: How Cultures of Fear, Humiliation, and Hope are reshaping the World' (2009), which has been translated into 20 languages.

Topics (Selection):

- Culture
- International Relations
- Europe
- Future Trends
- Role of Emotion

Publications (Selection):

- The Geopolitics of Emotion: How Cultures of Fear, Humiliation, and Hope are reshaping the World, 2009